EVENING WORLD PHYSICIAN.

PRICE ONE CENT.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 29, 1888.

FOULD GIVES HIMSELF UP.

BUT PROTESTS HIS INNOCENCE OF THE COLORED MINSTREL'S MURDER.

Susan Hendricks Tells the Story of Last Night's Tragedy in the "Black Barrachs "-A Mystery Which Baffles the Police-Corener Levy Holds Both the Woman and Her White Lover.

In the rear house at 239 West Twenty-nintl street, surrounded with filth and dirt, lies the body of Solomon Johnston, the wander inc negro minstrel who last night met his death at the hands of either his mistress, Susan Hendricks, or their boon companion a white waiter named Louis Fould.

When an EVENING WORLD reporter visited the hovel, which is known to the police as the "Black Barracks," crowds of colored people were gathered about the place discossing the murder.

Johnston and his mistress occupied two rooms on the top floor, and in the sittingroom, lying on his back, the face covered by an old petticoat which hid the gaping wound in the chest, the head and body resting in a pool of clotted blood, lay the body of the nurdered man.

The apartment indicated the character of the occupants. On a table lay a broken glass pitcher, and beside it on a tray were four glasses containing the dregs of beer. About two feet from the body lay the bottom of the lass pitcher, forcibly suggestive of the factat had been thrown at the dead man. The ed was upset, a basin beneath it was covered with blood lay upon the sill of the bedroon window.

The papered walls in some places were stained with blood, indicating that a fierce light had taken place.

From the position of the body it looks as if the murdered man was making for the hall door when he was stabled.

Officer Geering, who had charge of the body, had his hands full in keeping the crowd back.

The aged father of the murdered man called at the house and signified his intention of getting a permit for the removal of the body.

the body.

The strangest part of the whole case is the utter ignorance of the residents of the house of the occurrence. They one and all deny hearing anything of the struggle which must have occurred.

Officer Mains, who was called to the scene

Officer Mains, who was called to the scene of the tragedy almost an hour after it occurred, was informed by two women who live in the front house, Bessie Woodley and Lucy Lettis, that the Hendricks woman came down into the yard about one hour after the white man left and told them that "Sol" had stabled himself.

man left and told them that "Sol" had stabbed himself.

The neighbors say, however, that during the six months that the couple have resided in the house they have frequently quarrelled. This morning Susan Hendricks was brought to the Jefferson Market Police Court and Justice Patterson committed her to the Coroner's office for examination.

She was seen at the Coroner's office by the reporter and admitted to him that she had served ten months some time are of or cut.

reporter and admitted to him that she had served ten months some time ago for cutting a man named Saunders on Seventh avenue and Thirty-second street with a razor.

She had a cut over her eye and one of her ringers was tied up. When the reporter mentioned the fact of the broken pitcher and plate she said she knew nothing about them, but that they might have been broken in the right.

She appeared to be entirely unconcerned as to what would become of her, and reiterated her statement that Fould, and not she, killed Johnston. When taken before the Coroner she said that she was married to a man named Stephen Hendricks at Madison Junction, S. C., some seven years ago and that after living with him for two months she left him and came to this city. A baby was born, but it lived only two weeks. She said that she knew Johnston about six months and said he was her gentleman friend. She knew Fould, who was a Ger-man, about two years. He was a waiter, and the last place she knew he worked in was at Seyenth avenue and Thirty-second street.

Seventh avenue and Thirty-second street.

Johnston, the murdered man, came in about 1 o'clock she said. He had been out all night playing the guitar. They went to bed bed and were awakened about 10.30 o'clock by Fould's knocking on the door. She admitted him. Johnston was very jealous and when on one occasion he found a shirt of Fould's in the closet he asked her what it was doing there. She told him that it was to be washed and the next time the two met washed and the next time the two met they quarrelled.

Fould was in about twenty minutes when he asked Johnston if he wanted to get drunk and started out for beer. They drank until dinner time, when all hands had something

She asked Fould what time it was when he came in, and he told her it was 10,30. She was preparing to go to Mrs. Kessler's, for whom she was working.

They prevented her, and she stayed with them drinking beer. Later she said she was going, and stood up to go. Johnston struck her and the white man interfered. Then they grappled, and the next she knew Johnston fell, saying, "I am stabbed." The white man then left.

Coroner Levy after hearing the testimony committed her to the Tombs to await the investigation of the police.

Vestigation of the police.

Louis Fould, the supposed murderer, surrendered to the police at the Twentieth Precinct this morning and said that he was not guilty. Detective Powers took him to the Jefferson Market Police Court, where he will be arraigned this afternoon.

ISPECIAL TO THE EVERING WORLD. DENVER, Col., Aug. 29. - Early Monday norning Pap Riland was shot at his ranch on Sweetwater Creek by C. A. Babcock. He died last evening from the effects of his wounds. Pat Riland was one of the characters of Western Colorado. His ranch on the Sweetwater was the first located in this sec.

five years ago he was one of the pioneers of Sum mit County. Hardly a mining camp in that part of the State has enjoyed even a temporary boom but he hastened to the scene, eager to be among the first to win the maginary bonauza prize.

This is another added to the long list of mysterious tragedies of which the isolated mountains of Colorado have been the sole and dumb witness. Babcock and Pap were alone when it occurred. He left him right after the shooting, came down from the ranch to Dotsero, a distance of sixteen miles, and took a train for Glenwood Springs. and took a train for Glenwood Springs, where he gave himself up to Deputy Sheriff Little. The story he tells is that he was forced to shoot his aged victim in self-defense. His narration was confused and distorted.

As soon as the ranchers on the Sweetwater were made aware of the tragedy they were greatly incensed. As they collected together they began to talk freely of lynching Babcock, While they were considering the matter and preparing to act a friend of Babcock managed to get to one side and mounted him on a horse, and he thus got away and arrived at Dolsero in the nick of time to catch the morning train for Glenwood. distorted.

JOHNSON'S LEAP TO DEATH.

avenue, where, with his friends, Lindeman and Rudd, he rented rooms of J. J. Traverse, barkeeper at the Continental Hotel.

Johnson fell sick three weeks ago and was attended by Dr. A. H. Goelet. At times he expressed the fear that he would have to be taken to a hospital, and said he would prefer death to that.

At 3.35 this morning Mr. Traverse was awakened by Johnson's passing through his room.

awakened by Johnson's passing through his room.

"What are you up for, Mr. Johnson? What do you want?" he asked. Johnson paid no attention to him and went directly back to the laundry and raised the window. Traverse hurried after him, but was too late. When he reached the yard he found Johnson's body on its left side on the pavement in the back yard, directly under the third-story laundry window. He had struck on the left side of his head and death had come instantly. His body was removed to the Morgue.

Johnson was a steady young man, twenty-five years old and unmarried.

UNDER THE BOBTAIL'S WHEELS.

A Drunkes Man's Hand Squeezed and Prob-Bobtail cars are putting in their full time for mischief before the city legislation requiring the employment of conductors goes nto full effect. A victim of a Twenty third street jugger. nant stood in Justice Duffy's Yorkville Court this morning, and though convicted of intoxication was discharged with a reprimand.

He bore his punishment in the form of a hurt and probably mained hand, the result of pressure from the wheels of a bobtail car after he had been thrown from the rear platform. The presence of a conductor would have insured either a safe nlighting or the forbidding of a man in this one's condition to board the car.

The injured prisoner was John Galvin, of Williamsburg. His hand was attended to at Bellevue Hospital.

Secretary McLean says his company has fifty new cars under contract, and is thoroughly in carnest about reforming the systems.

A THIEVING CHURCH TRUSTEE

GREAT SCANDAL IN THE WASHINGTON SQUARE METHODIST CHURCH.

Freasurer Edward F. Stewart Locked Up in the Tombs for Embezzling $3,100 of the Congregation's Money-It Was a Fund Raised to Pay Off a Mortgage-His Em-

A defaulting church trustee spent last night in a Tombs cell, and is liable to spend many more, as there seems to be no inclination on the part of his friends to bail him He is Edward F. Stewart, of 125 Berkeley place, Brooklyn, and has been employed as a salesman with the wholesale millinery firm of Hill & Co., at Broadway and Canal street.

The amount which Stewart is alleged to have stolen is $3,100, and the story of the larceny is told by Charles E. Hadden, the builder, of 102 South Fifth avenue, on whose builder, of 102 South Fifth avenue, on whose complaint Stewart was indicted.

Air. Hadden is one of the trustees of the Washington Square Methodist Episcopal Church. He says that Edward F. Stewart, who was a prominent member of the congregation, was elected a trustee on Dec. 4, 1882, and at a meeting of the Board of Trustees four days later was made Treasurer of the corporation.

In the mouth of October, 1884, a movement was set on foot which resulted in the raising by subscription of sufficient money to lift the debt of $11,100 which had been a burden on the church for many years. This money was paid in to Mr. Stewart as treasurer, and he was instructed to satisfy the creditors of the church.

The indebtedness consisted of a mortgage for $5,000, three trustee notes of $1,000 each, and another mortgage for $3,100 which had been a lien on the church property since 1862.

On Dec. 20, 1884, Treasurer Stewart satis fied the $5,000 mortgage, and previous to that had taken up the three notes. Between March 19, 1885, and April 20, 1885, he entered in his books this item of credit:

noodwha shewart's renow trustees, who implicitly believed that their church was out of debt.

The mortgage was still in the hands of James M. Anderson of One Hundred and Seventy-sighth stree! and Fordham avenue, the assignee of the mortgagor, and no part of the principal had been paid.

The defaulting treasurer, however, was very careful to pay the interest on the mortgage from his own pocket, so that his rescality would not be revealed.

He made payments of interest regularly until March 15, 1888, when the holder of the mortgage, Jas. M. Anderson, communicated the fact that a payment of interest was due. This communication was addressed to Rev. John Rhey Thompson, pastor of the church. The information fell like a dynamite bomb among the officials of the Washington Square Methodist Church, who had looked upon their treasurer as a man of strictest integrity only to find him an ingrate and a thief.

The matter was placed before Stewart's fellow trustees, and it was decided to prosecute him criminally. He was indicted July 16, but was travelling on the road for his employers at the time, and was not arrested until yesterday afternoon.

Detective Sergt. Thomas Keernan took him into custody at Hill & Co.'s store in Broadway.

BLAINE'S HOT SHOT.

His Onset on Cleveland in the American Magazine.

'The President's Error' is the Title of His Attack.

Tariff and American Industries His Ammunition.

The "man from Maine" has loaded his run for bear and means to keep the barrel not this campaign by repeated shots into the memy's ranks. One heavy load will be discharged through the columns of the American Magazine for September. In this article Mr. Blaine does a bit of sharp-shooting. He draws a bead on no smaller game than the President of the United States, and to his own mind and satisfaction bowls Grover Cleveland completely over.

The article has been kept sacredly invisible as the mystic symbols in the Egyptian Temple. Only the President of the American Magazine Publication Company, the editor, . Brown, and the manager, Mr. Davis, ve read the screed in which Blaine excories the head of the Government.

The existence of the drastic paper and its rthcoming publication have been widely ough known for some time, and telegrams om all over the country have been received portuning the editor for a synopsis of the manuscript. Several of the leading papers in Philadelphia and other large neighboring cities sent on men to negotiate for a view of the Blaine article. But each and all have the Blaine article. But each and all have been steadily refused.

Even the directors of the magazine have only the vaguest idea of what the character of the contribution is.

The Evening World, however, through means of information which it is not necessary to disclose, had learned both the title of Mr. Blaine's paper and the nature of his attack upon Cleveland. It will bear the somewhat aggressive heading of "The President's Error."

The position assumed by Blaine in the article is that of censor of the President. He will review Cleveland's message of December, and statistics will be the wadding for the Blaine cartridge.

He will go over the figures and assertions of Cleveland and will show to his own satisfaction and possibly to that of many of his Republican readers that the figures are incorrect and the conclusions unwarranted and false.

To do this Mr. Blaine will have recourse to arithmetic himself, and will try to show that figures do not lie, when the figures are right. Among other things Mr. Blaine says: Among other things Mr. Blaine says:

Strang-ly enough the President neglects, either from design or oversight, to notice what effect the serious reduction of the tariff would have on the 1,810,256 men employed in transportation, viz., os the railroads, out. wide vessels. Tiver steamers and barges, causs, wagou and stage lines. These varied ways of transportation represent an investment of thomsands of millions of dollars of American money and give employment to nearly two millions of men, whose earnings support 9,000,000 of people. SMUGGLED HIS JEWELRY.

Merchant Chillean Vainly Tries to Escape from the Tolla. Armand Clalleau, a French merchant, of San Francisco, was arrested for sinuggling a quantity of jewelry and brought up before United States Commissioner Osborne to-day for examination.

He was a passenger on the steamer La Champagne, and when arrested was identified as a man who attempted to get by the Custom officers with a quantity of dutiable goods last year. Cialleau took the stand and made contradictory statements—first stating that he in-tended the jewelry for presents, and again that he had taken the property abroad to be repaired.

Questioned concerning his attempt last year, the man made the excuse that the purser of the vessel he sailed from France on that trip told him that he could escape paying duties by placing a sum of money on the top of the trunk containing the goods he wanted passed.

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 29. - Mr. Joseph Breed, Cashier of the Hartford Nationa Bank, cut his throat in the bank building and died an hour later.

The suicide was short in trustee accounts MRS, LANGTRY'S PLANS.

She Will Sail on the Etruria on Saturday and Get Some New Plays and Gowns. The folds of a disphenous peignoir fell gracefully from the recumbent figure of Mrs. Langtry this morning as from a sofa in the front room of her house in Twenty-third street she looked rather wearily from the window with the air of a Mariana in a mosted grange, the moated grange in this instance, however, being not only comfortable, but luxurious.

"I feel that everything is wrong to-day, she said languidly. Her hands were clasped larily above her head; the abandon of her attitude could not have been more charming if it had been studied. "I don't know what it is," she went on, "I think I must have a touch of malaria, or something of the kind. I am really ill—I am, indeed. You may believe it."

Mrs. Langtry closed her eyes. She looked Mrs. Langtry closed her eyes. She looked even more interesting, though, of course, she didn't know that. "My plans!" she said presently, with a start, when it was suggested that she might have a few to mention, in view of the recent extremely conflicting stories anent her movement.

"I really sail for Europe on Saturday by the Etruria. It is a settled thing. I am going to make a flying trip—so flying, in fact, that I shall return to this country on Sept. 29 by the Alaska, and have already cabled to Liverpool to secure a passage on that boat."

that I shall return to this country on Sept. 29 by the Alaska, and have already cabled to Liverpool to secure a passage on that boat."

Mrs. Langtry again relapsed into silence. She was blue. There is not the least doubt about that—as blue as the dainty little flowers worked upon the diaphanous peignoir.

"I am going to London," she said with an apparent effort. "to get some new dresses and a new pisy. You see, I want to equip myself for the season, and I need a play. Oh, yes, I have 'The Love Story,' but I want another. I have none in view, and if I had, and knew the name, I don't think I would mention it. Somebody would surely snap it up if I did."

Mrs. Langtry smiled slightly. She was thoroughly awake now. The question of snapping up plays is a live one with stars.

"I shall not play in California until spring," she said. "I have abandoned the tour until then. I shall open my season on Oct, 15, at Omaha. My trip abroad, you see will not alter my plans in the least,"

Mrs. Langtry again relapsed into silence. She closed her eyes. Even the tinkling of the horrible little bobtal cars that passed her door was unheeded. The diaghanous peignoir meant that she intended to rest, not talk.

WOMEN IN A PRIZE-FIGHT.

They Were Seconded by Their Brothers, and the Vanquished Called the Police. (SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.)

CHICAGO, Aug. 29. - Two women fought prize-fight of two rounds here evening, under Marquis of Queensberry rules. They were Mary Ann McNamara and Julia Perry, and the most peculiar feature of the whole disgraceful affair was that the brothers of the fighters acted as when time was called for the first round the women stepped up from their corners in the ring prepared especially for the occasion and sparred cautiously for an opening. Both found openings fast enough, and they exchanged wicked blows that disfigured their faces badly.

their faces badly.

There was a crowd of spectators present to witness the fight, and they cheered lustily when either succeeded in planting a blow on the face of the other.

When time was ca led for the ending of the first round neither had the advantage. In the second round, however, the observance of the rules of the ring was forgotten and the round was devoted to hair tearing and scratching.

The women had their sleeves rolled up and were as mad as hornets. Mary Ann proved more than a match for the Perry woman in this kind of cat-and-dog fighting, knocking her down and dragging her around the ring by the hair.

The Perry woman was unable to respond to the call for the third round so the and her. the call for the third round, so she and her brother got even by calling for the police. The women, their brothers and some of the spectators were arrested. A good deal of money was bet on the result of the fight.
